Drew Sarette is a freelance violinist and teacher. He plays regularly with the Huntsville Symphony and the Lexington Chamber Orchestra. Outside of orchestra playing, he enjoys playing chamber music around Louisville. Recent programs have featured Brahms' horn trio, Beethoven's string quartet No. 7, and Philip Glass' Quartettsatz.

Drew has a strong interest in historically informed performance, and plays on both Baroque and modern violins. He has participated in the Tafelmusik Baroque Summer Institute and in Oberlin's Baroque Performance Institute.

Drew also teaches violin in Louisville and New Albany, both privately and as a guest clinician at several schools. He has completed the full course of Suzuki teacher training with Dr. Timothy Durbin and combines both the Suzuki and traditional methods in his teaching style. He holds the Bachelor of Music in violin performance degree from Samford University, and a Master of Music in performance and pedagogy from the University of Louisville.
